XI. Superintendent's Report

Mr. Smalley has met with the three schools at the bottom of the district's academic performance spectrum and has set agreed-upon expectations with each school's leadership. Mr. Smalley has a handful of schools yet to visit, but has been able to visit most of them. He shared that the staff has gotten the ball rolling on improving key processes, leveraging the district's authorization functions, in particular.

Once schools are in the district, Mr. Smalley shared the vision to be great at equity and access, making sure we serve every student that comes with the services they need.

Finally, Mr. Smalley wants to consider what other actions we can take as an authorizer to help kids. Perhaps, successful schools could expand or add more grades to serve more children. The number one factor for great charter school operators when they consider opening in a new state is what the opportunity for growth looks like.

Mr. Smalley shared that he made the annual budget presentation to the House K-12 Finance subcommittee. He said that the members of that committee seemed supportive around the purpose of the district's work. He also supported the SC Public Charter School Alliance's per-pupil budget request for charter facility assistance.

Marshall-Carver has notified the district that they will not be opening in Fall 2016. Felton Lab's transfer application will be heard in February. Oceanside Collegiate Academy will likely submit a formal request for transfer due to South Carolina State's intent to bow out of the authorization business.
